THE GLORIOUS FOURTH.

AND HOW IT WAS CELEBRATED IN THIS CITY.

Minister Willis Publicly Rebukes the Reverend Joseph Cook—Other Happenings of the Day.

A salute from the Government battery awoke the echoes of old Punchbowl at daylight yesterday morning announcing that the sun was about to shine on the first anniversary of the proclamation of the Republic of Hawaii and the 119th of the Declaration of American Independence.

At 6 o'clock large crowds gathered on the main streets to witness the parade of the Antiques and Horribles which started from the yard in the rear of May's grocery store. Slight showers of rain interfered somewhat with the effect of the parade but did not dampen the ardor of those who participated. The committee awarded the first prize for the best selected character to C. D. Dennys, the Advertiser's mailing clerk, who personated Sequah, the medicine man. The part was well-dressed and sustained. His assistant cripples, musicians, etc., were mostly from the same office. The second prize for the best sustained character went to those who personated the Salvation Army corps. The prize for the best sustained character on a bicycle went to "the girl in bloomers" and the best selected character to the burlesque of the Lehua. The remnant of the Ma-roa army attracted much attention at the head of the column.

After this parade nearly every one wended their way to the wharves from which a good view of the boat races could be obtained. The ten-oared boat race was competed for by D. Croziers, crew and one from the police force under Captain Parker. The race was won by the latter, but Crozier has put in a claim for a foul which has not yet been settled. If allowed the race will probably be rowed again. The six-oared sliding-seat race was participated in by the Myrtles, Healanis and Leilanis. The former had the race from the start and won by eight lengths. The six-oared gig race was captured by a crew from the Eleanor which beat the men-of-war-men from the Bennington by five lengths. The latter also got badly left in the four-oared race against E. H. Mahuka's crew. The whaleboat race was won by the police crew.

Long before the hour announced the line of march of the military procession was crowded with friends of the boys in blue. Headed by the band, with W. C. King acting as drum-major, and a platoon of police under the command of Captain Parker, the National Guard of Hawaii presented a fine appearance as it marched along the route chosen. Over 600 men were in line, Colonel McLean and staff being at the head. At 9:45 the column entered the gates of the Executive building and passed in review before the President who was stationed on the steps of the building.

President Dole and Mrs. Dole, who as the first lady of the land was attended by a bevy of Honolulu's fairest daughters, held a reception in the hall of the Representatives immediately after the military pageant. Here an almost continuous stream of callers of all ages, sex and condition paid their respects to the President and his lady in true Democratic style. Foreign representatives jostled with mechanics, naval officers with hard working laboring men, ministers of the gospel with reporters and so on. To mention the names of a few of those present would be to slight the remainder. At the conclusion of the reception which was considered over upon the retirement of the American Minister and British representative those present repaired to Independence Park where literary exercises were held.

THE LITERARY EXERCISES.

Independence Park pavilion was crowded in every part at 11 o'clock for the literary exercises. There was a wait of twenty-five minutes for President Dole, who was detained by his reception at the Executive building. United States Minister Willis was president of the day, and besides him there were on the platform Consul-General Mills, E. P. Dole, orator of the day; Rev. D. P. Birnie, Dr. Joseph Cook, C. J. Whitney, also Geo. W. Smith, Geo. P. Castle and Ed. Towse of the literary committee. The hall was splendidly decorated with American colors. When the President entered, the whole audience rose and cheered.

Mr. Willis was introduced by Mr. Smith and said it gave him great pleasure to greet them on that great American anniversary. It was gratifying to know that in these far-off islands there were people, both native and foreign, who honored this day with an enthusiasm not excelled in the home land. Nor was that surprising, for many of the laws and the civilization of this land bore the indelible marks of American intelligence and patriotism. After further eloquent remarks of like tenor, Mr. Willis announced a change in the programme, on account of Dr. Cook having to leave by the steamer at 12 o'clock. He called upon that gentleman to deliver an address.

Dr. Cook made no preliminary compliments. He remarked on the want of success attained in representative governments with in the tropics. Here was a new republic without slaves, without caste and even without the color line. The attempt to establish a permanent republic in the tropics was like trying to plow a furrow in the sea. There had not been a live republic established where the snows did not fall. Godspeed the annexation of these islands to the United States. What they wanted was stable government. He had unlimited confidence in the men who had been chosen to run affairs. It had been said in the United States that when a scepter departs in this hemisphere it departs forever. The speaker discussed the labor question, holding that white men would not work hard continuously in the tropics. He still had hopes that this republic would afford a government of the people, by the people, for the people. He had no relations among the missionaries. Their constitution gave much power to the Senate, and it had been said that this was not a republic. Mr. Cook here provoked an exciting episode when he said: When people point to the late election returns, I beg leave to protest against misrepresentation. Many did not register and for very good reasons. Some of you did not know what might be the feeling of our Administration, which has not been friendly.

Mr. Willis (interrupting)—I am the presiding officer of this assembly of American citizens, and I wish to call your attention to the fact that this is not the time nor the place to eulogize nor to speak on any pending political questions between my country and this. I insist upon the proprieties of this occasion. I submit to the intelligent people of this audience that it is not the kind of speech for this place. I think the speaker might leave the environments of the city of Boston, and for this one day leave political feeling aside. (Loud applause.)

Dr. Cook—I was only saying what was the truth, that the attitude of the present Administration did prevent some people from registering, and to cause some people to say that you are not a republic. I hope I shall be justified in assuming that you are worthy of annexation and I believe you to be. I will not listen for an instant to your critics who call you anything but a republic, and I am prepared to repel that unjust accusation. I am an adopted citizen of Boston, where people are not accustomed to a strait jacket or a gag. (Applause.)

Mr. Willis—And nobody is ashamed of the citizenship of Boston.

Dr. Cook—Possibly I shall be allowed to say that Hawaii ought not to depend upon annexation to steady affairs here. My impression is that annexation will take care of itself.

Mr. Willis in introducing the reader of the Declaration of Independence, made some eloquent remarks upon that document, saying incidentally that past enmities should be forgotten in view of the great triumph of the Union.

Mr. C. J. Whitney read the Declaration with fine and measured elocution.

After the choir had sung, "Columbia, the Gem of the Ocean," and Keller's American hymn, the orator of the day was introduced.

Mr. E. P. Dole delivered the oration. It was a masterly effort, both in matter and delivery, marked with lofty patriotism and free from any semblance of spread-eagleism. At the conclusion of the exercises the orator was warmly congratulated by a great many people.

The proceedings closed with the singing of "Star Spangled Banner."

After the audience broke up the dining hall was speedily filled. T. E. Krouse of the Arlington had spread there an elegant collation, in which roast duck cooked to perfection and delicious salads were the leading dishes.

After the literary exercises and lunch the field sports took place, the following being the list of the winners:

100 yards dash (3 heats).—H. Espinda, first. Time, 11 4/5 seconds.

Running high jump.—Chris Willis first, with 5 feet 2 inches. J. Castino second, 5 feet 1 inch.

Ring Tournament.—Tie between H. Wilder and Charles Hyde. The deciding course was won by Charles Hyde. Score 7 to 6 rings. This was probably the most exciting event of the day.

Boat and shoe race (juvenile).—Wm Kekoa, first; Manuel Boteler, second.

Pole Vault.—Won by Chris Willis, with 8 feet 3 inches; M. G. Johnson, 7 feet 8 inches (6 inches handicap).

Climbing Greased Pole.—After the grease had been rubbed off by other contestants, Wm. Chapman climbed to the top and took off the five-dollar gold piece placed there as a prize.

120 yards hurdle race.—Henry Hapai, 18 1/5 seconds; George Clark, second.

Running Broad Jump.—J. Castino, 15 feet 8 inches; Chris Willis, second, 17 feet 6 inches.

150 Yards Dash.—T. Pryce, 17 1/2 seconds; J. Espinda, second.

(Concluded on fifth page.)
